The meeting was called to order by Miss Libbie Stoner, the president, and the minimus were read and adopted. After this, several ladies counted noses and found that there were only fifteen members of the association present, which number, according to the provisions of the constitution, lacked five of being a quorum. This obstacle did not wholly obstruct the transaction of business. The rules were suspended, and the president proceeded to appoint the following committees:

POLICE COURT POINTS.

A Girl Who Would Like to Begin a New Life-Some Bad Easter Eggs. Easter Monday in the Police Court was not the joyous occasion to the prisoners brought before the bar that it was in the churches and homes of the city. There was nothing joyous in the parade that filed before Judge Miller this morning. It was emphatically a blue Monday for the poor wretches who passed along where their stories were weighed in the scales of

The first prisoner brought before the The first prisoner brought before the Bar was a type but rarely seen in Washington. She looked as if she had been transplanted to the Capital from the lowest ranks of the denizens of the Bowery. She gave her name as Kate May, and said she lived near Freedman's Hospital, in a locality that has furnished a good many successful candidates for the jail and not a few for the hangman's noose.

She pleaded guilty to the charge of being a vagrant in a defiant tone of voice and the Judge gave her the usual sentence, but as she turned to go back to the dock he called her back.

'Where do your parents live?' asked his Hon "Baltimore," was the answer.
"Don't you want to go back there;
don't you want to start life over again?"
was the next question.
The girl thought it over a moment or two. She seemed to be taking a mental review of her life and also troubled a little by the kindness in his Honor's voice.

"Yes," she said at last, "I think I would."

The name of the girl's mother and her address was taken and she will be sent home.
